THIS MAN COULD BATH SPAIN IN BLOOD

Don Carlos, Legal King, in Retirement, Has But to Say the Word to Command 100,000 Fighting Men.

MADRID, May 23.—Nowhere was the birth of a child to the royal house of Spain awaited with greater anxiety than at the palace in Venice where dwells Don Carlos, at whose word 100,000 Spaniards, fully armed and perfectly organized, will march their country, with blood in an effort to place him on the throne of Spain, of which he is the legal occupant, and to re-establish the French monarchy which is his by inheritance.

In order to make clear the exact position of the Spanish succession, and to understand the situation of Don Carlos, close study of the more modern historical developments of Spain is necessary. When King Carlos IV, died he left two sons, Ferdinand and Carlos.

Ferdinand succeeded to the throne. His first two marriages were childless, but his third union with Donna Marie Cristina, resulted in the birth of a daughter, Donna Isabella. As, however, the Salic law forbidding the succession of women prevailed in Spain, she could not succeed, and the heir to King Ferdinand was his brother Carlos. The members of the court party, however, were bitterly opposed to Don Carlos, and they managed to get King Ferdinand to abolish the Salic law by royal decree, thereby allowing his daughter Isabella to become queen.

The king's brother Carlos entered a protest based on constitutional grounds, but as he was a man of indolent character and utterly wanting in energy he at first did nothing more than protest. A few years later an attempt to secure his throne by force of arms was a failure, and on his death his son took up the struggle and managed to keep life in the Carlist party.

When on account of her improper life, Isabella, who by this time had son, Alfonso, was driven from the throne, the short-lived Spanish republic came into being. With the assassination of the president, General Prim, the republic came to an end, and Prince Amadeus of Aosta, an Italian prince, was elected king in spite of the protests of Don Carlos. He soon tired of governing such a turbulent kingdom, abdicated and returned to Italy. It was then that the present Carlist pretender came prominently to the front. He entered a vigorous protest against the succession of Don Alfonso, and followed this up by calling his partisans to arms, and in 1873 began the Carlist war which drenched Spain with blood.

After varying fortunes, Don Carlos lost the struggle and crossed the French frontier with the wrecks of his army. Since then he has been living in Venice, awaiting a favorable opportunity for renewing the struggle for his rights.

This serves to make clear the position of Don Carlos. He and his supporters say that his great uncle, King Ferdinand, performed a coup d'état in abolishing the Salic law, that the rights of the brother of King Ferdinand, were clear and absolute under the law, and that King Alfonso XIII, is a usurper sitting on a throne to which he has no right.

From a strictly technical point of view, not only is Don Carlos the legitimate heir to the throne of Spain, but he is undoubtedly the heir to the throne of France as well. It was for this reason that he was expelled from French territory by the government of the republic. If he should even set foot in France he would instantly be arrested. A small but highly aristocratic party exists in France known as the "Blancs d'Espagne," with the aim of placing Don Carlos in the throne of France. In fact these French Carlists are more Carlist than the Spanish Carlists themselves, and they are very anxious to see Don Carlos get the throne of Spain as a stepping stone to the throne of France.

It is for this reason that the French republican government has always favored the Alfonso party in Spain. Indeed, though the fact is known to few people, it was the action of the French government which caused Don Carlos to lose the last Carlist war. In 1873 Don Carlos' army had the Alfonso troops at their mercy strategically, for the latter had their backs to the French frontier and were cut off from the interior of Spain. With the connivance of the French government the Alfonso army crossed the frontier into France, secured provisions and ammunition from the French arsenal at Bayonne, and then marched back to the Spanish territory, attacking the Carlists from the rear. This action of the French government was, of course, unexpected, and could never have been foreseen by the Carlists.

The surprise was complete, and the wreck of the army of the pretender was eventually driven on French territory near Biarritz and of course received not the slightest encouragement from the French people or the French government, was forced to disband.

Don Carlos chartered a special train, hurried to Callas and crossed over to London. It is an amusing fact that he never paid the $1,500 which that train cost and the item appears year after year in the French budget as a debt to be repaid.

The head of the Carlist party in France at the present time is the Comte de Maffie. One of the leading spirits was the late Marquis de Chaulvigny. The organization in Paris with which men of this type affiliated was known as "the head center."

The way it was worked was as follows:

There is, say, a group of twenty Carlists. They owe obedience to and receive instruction from a leader. Twenty such leaders receive orders from a man belonging to the inner circle, and this man in his turn receives instructions from the "head center." None of the rank and file know any one except the heads of their respective groups. The members of the group do not of necessity know each other; they may occasionally act together for some special service, but the only man who needs to know the name and address of each of the persons comprising the group is the leader.

If the Spanish police arrest a man of the rank and file all that he can possibly do is to betray the name of his immediate leader. The leaders furthermore do not know each other. Each leader knows only the man in the inner circle from whom he receives his instructions.

All therefore that can be betrayed is a small section of the organization. Every Carlist swears to provide himself with a rifle and ammunition, and to keep them concealed. He is further bound to take the field on the first signal from Don Carlos.

This whole organization was the work of the Spanish marquis, for many years the trusted confidante of Don Carlos. The younger members of the party, however, soon became dissatisfied with him as they thought that he was not enterprising enough. Two years ago at a meeting of the leaders held in Paris at the Grand Hotel, he was deposed and replaced by a comrade, one of two of whom are in France and one in Spain. It is interesting to note that this particular marquis is at the present time in Spain, and is supposed to be watching the drift of events, though of his career with other members of the Carlist organization, and of his actual deposition there is not the slightest doubt. But he is supposed to be acting under the personal direction of Don Carlos himself.

At the present moment there are 150,000 stands of arms in the possession of the Carlist party in Spain. But what, it will be asked, are the chances of an insurrection. That is a difficult question to answer, even at best, and it is difficult even for the Spaniards to understand the mysteries of Spanish politics.

But this much it is safe to say: The instant a signal is given 100,000 men will respond to the call, armed and ready for the fray.

The whole of the Basque provinces and nine-tenths of the province of Catalonia may be said to be for Don Carlos, first, last and all the time. In every part of every mountain in these sections the portrait of the pretender is hanging, and the owner has the rifle and the cartridges carefully concealed in some spot which can be reached in a few minutes. The only uniform which they possess is the colored "beret," the graceful head-dress of the Basques. Each of the four districts into which, for Carlist purposes, Spain is divided, has a different color—the four being red, blue, white and green.

Of the fidelity of the Carlists to their leader there can be no doubt. It is curious that there should be even now 100,000 men in Spain ready to take the field and die for a man

NOGALES WOMAN DIDN'T PAY DUTY

Now She Must Defend Suit at Tombstone to Confiscate Her Diamonds Valued at $856, Bought in Mexico.

(Special to Review.)
PHOENIX, May 23.—Pleading that she did not know it was necessary to pay duty, Miss Fannie D. Brent wore $856 worth of diamonds across the international boundary on April 29, which are now in the possession of Myron H. McCord, formerly of Phoenix and now collector of customs at Nogales.

Under instructions from Collector McCord, Deputy Collector W. W. Carpenter seized the sparklers, which he turned over to his superior, who has safely locked in a big safe at Nogales, where their brilliancy is blushing unscathed.

Asked about the seizure of the diamonds, United States Attorney J. L. B. Alexander stated that he has filed suit in the second judicial district at Tombstone, demand the forfeiture of the gems to the government.

In his complaint United States Attorney Alexander alleges that the stones were brought into the United States without the formality of duty, and therefore should be forfeited to the government, which will sell them to realize the duty due.

Miss Brent is one of the popular residents of Nogales, and purchased the jewelry on the Mexican side of the line in Nogales, on April 18, at La Moda store.

Two nights later she crossed the international boundary, and went to the Montezuma hotel. She wore the diamonds while crossing, and for that reason supposed it to be unnecessary to pay Uncle Sam for the privilege of bringing her ornaments into this country.

But Collector McCord thought otherwise. In fact, he felt convinced that Miss Brent should have paid duty. He ordered Deputy Carpenter to search her apartments at the Montezuma hotel, where he found the diamonds. Miss Brent gave them up tearfully, but without resistance.

As soon as the diamonds were in his possession, Collector McCord notified United States Attorney Alexander at Phoenix, and the latter on learning the alleged facts in the affair, prepared the papers and has just filed suit at Tombstone.

Miss Brent's diamonds were much more valuable on this side of the line than they were in Mexico. She bought them in Nogales, Sonora, for a total of $325, but on this side they are valued at $856.

This marked increase in value is due to the heavy duty Uncle Sam exacts under the high tariff on such luxuries as diamonds. It amounts to 60 per cent of the value of the baubles brought into the country.

Miss Brent's jewelry, which is now in Collector McCord's hands, consists of two diamond earrings and a beautiful gold bracelet set with a large emerald and about twenty small diamonds. She bought the earrings in Mexico for $250 and the bracelet for $450.

The only explanation Miss Brent has been able to give the customs officials is that she did not think it necessary to pay duty on the jewelry.

But the customs officers have not reached the point of permitting people to say whether or not it is necessary to pay duty, and frequently seize dutiable goods brought in without paying the duty to remind others that they must pay or run the risk of losing their valuable property.

TWOMEY TAKES TWO CLEVER CROOKS

Constable Lands Men Alleged to Have Been Operating As Receivers of Stolen Goods—Business Very Lucrative.

In the capture of A. Walters and Chas. Goodman yesterday, the local police believe they have run down two of the cleverest crooks that ever operated in the Warren District. Up until the time Constable Dennis Twomey arrived on the scene and informed them that he would take a hand in the game, these two men were carrying on a very lucrative business, buying, it is alleged, stolen copper, brass and lead at very cheap rates, and shipping it east, where they found a ready market.

For several weeks past the foremen and clerks of the Copper Queen supply department have noticed an enormous increase in the number of brass valves, the amount of block tin and copper wire which were being used, and finally the matter came to the attention of the management.

An investigation showed that there was no legitimate reason for the big increase in the amount of these materials used, and the conclusion was arrived at that they were being stolen. The case was placed in the hands of Constable Twomey.

The officer found out that there was a firm operating in Dubach canyon under the name of the Southwestern Metal Company, which makes regular shipments to the firm of Rosecrans in many metal dealers in Kansas City. The volume of these shipments was so large that it caused suspicion, and the officer went to the offices of the company. He found that all business was transacted in a shack in Dubach Canyon, and that in the cellar there was stored several barrels full of brass, copper, lead and tin. Several of the pieces, which are apparently brand new, had been built in a fire which had been built in a steel wheelbarrow, to give them the appearance of being old.

The officers placed both members of the Southwestern Metal Company under arrest. They were arraigned before Judge Hogan, and Goodman furnished bond in the sum of $250 to appear in court on Monday at 3 o'clock. Walters was unable to furnish bond and is in jail. He will be given a preliminary hearing tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock.

It is the theory of the officers that these two men have built up a large business, being supplied with the goods by boys and others who stole them wherever it was possible. At the present time there are twelve barrels full of stolen goods raised and waiting for shipment, and there are others in the offices of the company.

From correspondence found on the prisoners it was plain that the business had been very profitable. Goodman in two different places within a few days they refer to having drawn on the Kansas City firm through the local banks for $200 each time.

Goodman has been employed by the Calumet & Hecla Mining Company as a pumpman, and has had every opportunity to get away with such articles as were found in the shipments.

CHORAL UNION HAS ARRANGED PROGRAM

Probably Best Musical Entertainment Ever Heard In Bisbee.

The Men's Choral Union of Bisbee are promising one of the finest programs ever given in this city at their second annual concert, which will occur in the room of the Young Men's Christian Association tonight. When seen last night Professor George E. Krinbill, who is directing the union, said:

"We have a program that will eclipse any ever heard by the Bisbee public. We do not have to go out of our membership for talent; each number is given by a member of the Union, and they are excellent."

No charge for admission, but there will be a collection for the Young Men's Christian Union of Bisbee, which is being done at the hospitals of the city.

$1,000,000,000 FOR NEW STEEL RAILS

PITTSBURGH, May 23.—The railroads of the United States must spend $1,000,000,000, perhaps more, for new steel rails.

Even the heavy rails now in use are not strong enough to bear the heavy fast trains.

An official of the Carnegie Steel company declares that on a recent run of the eighteen-hour flyer on the Pennsylvania railroad between New York and Chicago twenty rails were broken by speed and weight of the train.

Commenting on this fact, Charles M. Schwab, former head of the steel trust, declares that a rail of nickel steel will have to be adopted. Such a rail will cost three times as much as the heavy Bessemer or open hearth rails now in use.

whom they have never seen.

Don Jaime, son of the pretender, a week ago made a journey through Spain, and though he was recognized on several occasions, he recrossed the French frontier without the French government being aware of his mission.

DATTO WRITES DOUGLAS FRIEND

From the far away island of Jolo, where rules the Sultan of Sulu, came yesterday a letter from Datto Batera, sa, in the Arabian script employed by the Moros, to his friend J. A. Lewandowski, the local mining man. The Datto at the time he indited the letter thoughtfully had a translation made for Mr. Lewandowski's benefit, and that accompanied the Arabic letter. In it he pays his respect to Mr. Lewandowski, recalls the pleasant times they had together in the past, when Mr. Lewandowski was among the Moros as a representative of an English syndicate, suggested that the mining man pay them a visit again and spoke feelingly of what a pleasure it would be to see him again.

The Arabic characters used in the letter are most amazing. Chinese writing is not near so complicated as the Arabic appears to be. This is not the first letter Mr. Lewandowski has received from Datto Batera. Their relations were so intimate when the mining man was in the Moro islands that a friendly arose between them that has resulted in correspondence being exchanged from time to time.

While in Jolo, which was about the time the American government acquired those islands, Mr. Lewandowski acquired from the Sultan of Sulu the island of Palawan by concession. He still has a twelfth interest in concession.

W. H. Neel and C. J. Hynham were in Douglas yesterday from the Four Star ranch arranging for the shipment of 4000 head of cattle from this point. They were disappointed in getting cars which will prevent them from shipping from Douglas. They, however, received a wire from Pierce that the Southern Pacific could supply them with forty cars at that point. They need at least one hundred cars for their entire shipment.

Forty cattle are scattered over Sulphur Springs valley, some of them being within eight miles of Douglas. These will have to be driven to Pierce. The first shipments will be made to Colorado. They have recently bought from the Greene Cattle company 2700 head of two-year-old steers which will be shipped to the ranch in Montana. They are an exceptionally fine lot, and the buyers feel very lucky in securing this lot.

"The range is in first class condition," said Mr. Neel last evening, "and the cattle are looking extremely well. The range is getting a little dry but is not suffering. Cattle men are in good shape at present."
